

Abstract

The present invention describes an automatically switched optical mesh network that provides the following advantages as compared to the known prior art. First, this solution eliminates the need for a centralized address database/directory, and second, this approach re-uses BGP, which may be implemented by the optical network for uses other than address resolution. The solution is accomplished by introducing an Internal Border Gateway Protocol (IGBP) based optical point of attachment distribution mechanism.